Pushkar

Pushkar has a magnetism all of its own – it's quite unlike anywhere else in Rajasthan. The town curls around a holy lake, said to have appeared when Brahma dropped a lotus flower. It also has one of the world's few Brahma temples, The Hindu Scriptures describe as it as "Tritha Raj" the king of pilgrimage sites related to a water-body and relate it to the mythology of the creator-god Brahma

With 52 bathing ghats and 400 milky-blue temples, the town often hums with puja (prayers) generating an episodic soundtrack of chanting, drums and gongs, and devotional songs. The main street is one long bazaar, selling anything to tickle a traveler's fancy, from hippy-chic tie-dye to didgeridoos. Despite the commercialism and banana pancakes, the town remains enchantingly small and authentically mystic.

Pushkar is only 13km from Ajmer.

Ajmer

Ajmer is a bustling chaotic city, 13km from the traveler heaven of Pushkar. It surrounds the tranquil lake of Ana Sagar, and is itself ringed by the rugged Aravalli Hills. It contains one of India's most important Muslim pilgrimage centres, the shrine of Khwaja Muin-ud-din Chishti. Ajmer is also a significant centre for the Jain religion, possessing an amazing golden Jain temple.
